

Construing Humphry Davy

Frank James

This talk will commence with recollecting David Gooding and his work, particularly how his ideas concerning construals emerged out of his historical work on Michael Faraday, especially in regard to replication. The second part of the talk will look at how construals might be of use in interpreting the work of Humphry Davy, using his discovery of the physiological effects of nitrous oxide.